Excerpt: . be familiar to all who have read his Lapland Tour. The great botanist, after noticing the strange fact that although four persons partook of this terrible compound, none of them seemed one penny the worse, remarks that the active principle in the aconite, as in most of the Ranunculaceae, is extremely volatile, and dispersed in a great measure by heat. Doubtless this is likewise the case in the hemlock, although it belongs to a different natural order. The arum (Arum maculatum) furnishes us with another example. It is exceedingly poisonous, yet Portland sago is made from it: repeated washings, and then the agency of heat, deprives the powder prepared from its roots of all acrimony. Depend on it--Every green herb, from the lotus to the dandelion, is rich with delicate aids to help inquisitive man. I asked, when told of the notice in the Pall Mall to which Mr. Breuvel alludes, Did Mr. Harley, like the pilgrim of old, boil the peas?--Helen E. Wainey. Blood.--I see it stated in all the books that blood consists of white as well as red globules. I am afraid I shall draw a hornet's nest about me if I venture to doubt upon this subject; I take it for granted it is right because so many say so, but I cannot satisfy myself about it. It spoils the globules to put water to them, unless some salt is put into it, but I never try anything but...
